Structuring curriculum and courses to increase achievement by increasing the academic rigor of each course, increasing expectations for all students and providing structure and support so all students can access high quality, content-rich instruction. Changes such as eliminating lower level courses, adding additional courses that are designed to remediate or accelerate specific skills and increasing diploma requirements are being considered by school communities as ways to increase student achievement and assure all stakeholders that students receiving diplomas have the skills necessary for post-secondary success. Test scores served as the basis for analyzing placement in courses, grades in courses, and examining the relationship between course taking patterns and performance on the state assessment. The study included 1,010 students who recently graduated or are still attending Cape Henlopen High School. 8th grade English teachers were surveyed about how they make their recommendations for student course placement in 9th grade English and this process is explained in detail. 9th grade English teachers participated in a focus group which discussed differences in instruction, student composition and expectation at each level of 9th grade English to provide an understanding of the educational experience for students in each course level. Finally, guidance counselors were interviewed about how communication about scheduling, course offerings and course requirements with parents, staff, students and the community occurs. The findings show that students have different educational experiences that are directly linked to the level of course they took. There is a pattern of placement in differentiated courses---minorities and males are overrepresented in the lower level courses and barely present in the higher level courses. Comparing test data with student course taking finds that students who went into high school with the same standardized test scores in 8th grade show a difference in their 10th grade test that is directly related to the level of 9th and 10th grade English courses they took. Not many students move up or down course levels, but of those who do, most move down. Overall, the study confirms that the level of course makes a difference on the educational experience of students.
