He was showing me the Wild Hunt. Teaching me of the mad Fae and bloodthirsty hounds they'd trained. I learned that each of the hounds had a gift. A talent. Something the Sidhe would give their wolves when they were particularly pleased with them. Gabriel had originally belonged to the Master of the Hunt, which was why he'd been charged to lead the group on the nights they wished to run ...

For centuries the Wild Hunt was a story people told to frighten their children. Eventually the Hunt grew to such strength that whenever they rode, the call of the Hounds could drag the spirits of the dead from their graves. Until the people caught between the Hunt and their intended victims couldn't tell whether the Riders were men, Fae, beast, or Specter.

MOONLIGHT KISSED CHORDS by Poets of the Fall @ Ultimate ...

Hunt mentions his growing old, and mentions that he is "weary," "sad," and that "health and wealth have miss'd" him. This, combined with his calling Time a "thief," suggests this poem was meant as a sort of protest against the growing control time and age has over man. One thing time cannot control, he seems to be saying, is the fact that he was kissed by Jenny.
